

About "citations" and "mentions" in the work of the scientific researcher (Pierre Tap, March 2022)

The importance of "citations" and "mentions" in the work of researchers is constantly checked, both in the way authors are evaluated, for example in researchgate, and in the way they are presented in the media, at the same time as the fame of the journals in which the documents have been published, or the "international rating" given to the researcher, etc.

The satisfaction of the researcher is well taken into account, but in a context of sometimes constraining competition.

A problem arises, however, concerning the difference between "citation" and "mention". Logically, there is a "citation" if it implies a reference with quotation marks or an evocation of the position of the cited author in the text of the article. There would be "mention" if the reference is limited to a bibliographic reference in brackets. In fact, it can be seen that this distinction, which is too rigid, is difficult to take into account. Other arguments are undoubtedly involved: peer-reviewed journals, or book chapters, etc.

But Academia.edu proposes an interesting system that allows us to go beyond this and introduce a mutual aid process. Each "mention" is associated with the complete title of the publication, with the possibility of downloading and thus reading the entire document and of being able to send a message to the author and establish a possible dialogue with him/her.

I wanted to show this opportunity here!

I took the time (as a "retired" person) to make a list of the authors of the "mentions" that the publications of our various teams (Toulouse, Lisbon, and others) have received, including my own. If you find your name in this list, I thank you very much for this (these) mention(s) and assure you that I will contact you to discuss what we have in common and to discuss our possible differences (allowing each of us to move forward!). Sincerely, Pierre
